In contrast to adult patients, endoscopic examinations are often performed to evaluate the activity of CD in children. In this prospective multicenter study, we evaluated the diagnostic value of the rate of stenosis in patients with suspected CD using repeat endoscopic examinations. Methods ===== The study was approved by the institutional review boards of all 10 participating institutions and was performed following the Declaration of Helsinki. Informed consent was waived. Children who underwent endoscopy with suspected CD from May 2011 through December 2012 were included. Repeat endoscopies were scheduled within 4 weeks after the initial endoscopy and biopsies were obtained from the terminal ileum. Stenoses were classified as penetrating or nonpenetrating according to the revised Porto Criteria. To establish the accuracy of the final diagnosis of CD, the final diagnosis of CD was confirmed by pathological findings at resection surgery or clinical courses that became normal on follow-up endoscopy. The predictive value of each endoscopic parameter was analyzed by comparing the initial and subsequent endoscopy. Results ===== Among 922 eligible patients, 822 patients were included in this study. The final diagnosis of CD was established by surgery (n =
